NEW FACULTY MEMBERS JOIN MUSIC SCHOOL

Moorestown School of Music, South Jersey's Suzuki School has added two musicians to its instrumental faculty.

Lisa Kramer, cello teacher, has bachelors and masters degrees in Cello Performance, and has been trained as a Suzuki cello teacher. Jessica Nataupsky, violin teacher, has a bachelors degree in violin performance and a masters degree in String Pedagogy and has been trained as a Suzuki violin teacher.

“Active performers, both of these new faculty members bring the added background of having grown up with the Suzuki method,” said Mary Anne O'Meara, Executive Director of the school. “Both Ms. Kramer and Ms. Nataupsky enjoyed their lessons as children and want to create that joy in their students.”

Moorestown School of Music features lessons in cello, violin and piano following the Suzuki Method. This method models learning of musical instruments the way children all over the world learn their native language: with a positive attitude, patience, listening and parent involvement.
